Excerpt: .or vanity, and the woman who was neither vain nor solicitous about herself would never love anybody. And as for men, they don t marry like schoolboys. If a woman esteems her husband, it is because he has not merely wedded a pretty woman, a rare toy, a fiveminutes plaything: the five minutes are to last a lifetime--and so is the wife.

Unquestionably, a man s whole existence is coloured by his home life: it is here that the law of the environment shows itself more especially in operation. The wife is often the cashier, the ruling spirit of the household, and from this arises the French genius for economy. So marriage tends more and more to become a contract. We have given up the delightful old custom of formal betrothals, which endued realities with so marvellous a fragrance. We prefer, as soon as...
